

IMPRO Project Final Workshop for Dissemination and Discussion

Approaches and framework conditions for improved animal health in organic dairy farming

To whom it may concern,

The IMPRO project is about strategies and tools to improve animal health in organic dairy farming and to address what is needed to bring organic dairy farming closer to the expectation of consumers.

Minimum standards laid down in the EU regulation on organic farming have not led to outstanding animal health, which is an important reason for buying organic products. Indeed, prevalences of production diseases in organic dairy farms do not generally differ from levels reported in conventional dairy farms. Therefore, new strategies are required to address the need to improve animal health in organic dairy farming and to correspond to the expectation of consumers.

In order to assess the current state and investigate options for improvement, we visited more than 200 organic farms in Europe. Farmers and animal health advisors participated in the project and contributed to the assessment of the level of extant production diseases, the estimation of the costs of these diseases and the benefits of animal health improvements, as well as undertake an examination of the motivation and attitudes of farmers and their animal health advisors to a range of measures to improve animal health.

We invite you to participate in a lively discussion with members of the project team and other stakeholders on results of our research activities and implications of a participatory approach to improve and harmonize the animal health status in organic dairy farming.

We are confident the workshop will meet both your interest and those of the sector and we look forward to meeting you in Brussels.
